Highlights

- Equal jump heights concealed different force–time curves in 805 football jumps
- Four curve components explained 74.8% of variance, almost all in the landing
- Vendor metrics, age and body mass explained only 2.7–13.1% of each component
- Curve-shape differences were largely trial-specific rather than athlete traits
- Routine force-plate data contain unused information for monitoring decisions